

Implementation Site Visits

Job-embedded coaching helps inform educators

Students should ultimately benefit from teachers' professional development. However, research tells us that very little of the knowledge gained in professional development actually impacts instructional practice unless it is paired with job-embedded coaching. Renaissance Learning™ Consultants bridge this gap to ensure students get the greatest benefit from your Renaissance Learning solutions.

Each Implementation Site Visit is planned in advance with school leadership to ensure it provides the exact support needed, which could include:

- Building-level data analysis and planning
- Grade-level data analysis and planning
- Classroom coaching
- Modeling of best practices
- Question-and-answer sessions
- Goal setting and progress monitoring with school leadership

Adding Implementation Site Visits to your professional development plans will ensure your investment in Renaissance Learning resources reaps optimum student results.

As a result of each Implementation Site Visit, participants will:

- Gain deeper insight into student data to inform their work
- Monitor progress and student growth
- Plan next steps to meet student needs
- Deepen understanding of instructional best practices supported by Renaissance Learning resources
- Assess your level of implementation to ensure students are getting maximum benefits from Renaissance Learning resources being used

Dedicated District Consultant

In some cases, especially in large districts, it makes sense to have the Implementation Consultant in the district full time. In this case the Implementation Consultant would perform the above duties for each school in the district, but provide additional district-level services, including:

- Facilitating a strategic planning meeting to identify long-term goals, key performance indicators, and plan for support throughout the implementation year
- Providing consultant progress reports to the district to inform district leaders about progress being made site-by-site across the district
