

Helping students become more inspired readers

Motivate, monitor, and manage both independent and close reading practice for higher reading growth.

Benefits

- > Increase engagement with personalized goals, authentic books, and high-interest nonfiction articles
- > Save time searching for close reading practice content with a collection of high-interest nonfiction articles searchable by level, topic, or skills
- > Improve insight with a reading dashboard that offers comprehensive data, skill progression, and supportive resources

Close reading and independent practice

Students are excited to meet their independent reading goals because they choose their own books. Teachers can choose nonfiction articles for students to practice close reading using instructional skills activities built into each article. Activities include highlighting and tagging to cite text evidence, “show-you-know” writing prompts, and a comprehension quiz.

A research-proven program

Students using Renaissance Accelerated Reader 360® (including English learners, struggling readers, and students receiving free and reduced lunch) are nearly twice as likely to meet benchmarks for college and career readiness standards, according to a study of data from 2.8 million students.

Easy access to content and data

Students can discover that next great book with suggestions based on their reading history, level, and book popularity.

Students read, cite, write, and quiz to build skills necessary for success on summative assessments.

A collection of high-interest articles keeps students engaged in close reading practice.

“My students actually beg to use Accelerated Reader 360 and the percentage of nonfiction texts read by students has doubled this year. Yes, doubled.”
